

Allotments

Orchards and allotments can be very popular with bats. Like birds during the day, bats can help to control insect populations of your allotment and by allowing insects to survive in such places their natural predators like bats will also benefit.

What to look out for?

Orchards in particular can be very rich in moths and flies which will attract bats. Compost heaps also make an ideal habitat for insects and a log pile in a damp, shady spot will also encourage insects, particularly beetles.